The North Carolina Division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy (UDC) officially began its second century in October at the organization's 101st annual convention — in Raleigh — recommitting its approximately 2,000 members to its historical, educational, benevolent, memorial and patriotic objectives.

With 64 chapters across North Carolina, the state's division is one of the larger units in the UDC. The national organization marked its first century at the 1994 convention in Richmond, where it is headquartered.

The women's service organization is based on lineal descent from Confederate veterans. It was founded in Nashville, Tenn., in 1894 as an outgrowth of hospital and memorial groups which sprang up in the South in the years following the Civil War. It was named in honor of Winnie Davis, daughter of Jefferson Davis, president of the Confederacy. Throughout the late 19th century Winnie Davis was referred to as the "Daughter of the Confederacy."

The UDC has its state headquarters and a museum in downtown Raleigh near the Executive Mansion. It is the site of frequent statewide gatherings.

The North Carolina Division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy is based on lineal descent from veterans.

President Katherine S. Baird of Lumberton and other officers oversee activities that range from preserving monuments and cemeteries where Confederate veterans are buried to honoring contemporary veterans who are descendants of Confederate warriors. The group also volunteers its services to living war veterans, provides financial help to survivors of Confederate veterans, provides scholarships to students with Confederate veteran ancestors and hosts a History Bowl competition for junior high school students.

At the recent state convention, Crosses of Military Service were awarded to six veterans of World War I and World War II and Vietnam, three honored posthumously. The medal, an outgrowth of the Southern Cross of Honor given for distinguished valor following the 1860s war, is given to men and women who have served honorably. Cited were Jack O'Neal Arthur, Billy Barnes Oliver and Lewis Edwin Bruce Jr. Honored posthumously were Percy Lee Dowell, Jarvis Stanley McLohon and Robert E. Lewis.

National Defense Medals, recognizing men and women who were on active duty but did not qualify for the organization's Korean and Vietnam Crosses of Military Service or who served during the Persian Gulf war, went to three men: Alvin Dwayne Aaron, Jeff David Perryman and Jerry Christopher Goff. The Armed Forces Expeditionary Service Medal, which cites men and women who served in the Armed Forces on active duty in support of the United States and the United Nations, went to Army Lt. Col. Alvin Dwayne Aaron, also honored for action in the Persian Gulf and for service in Panama in 1990.
